Man Burned To Death In Truck Cab At Penn Valley

ASKS COUNCIL TO SETTLE DISPUTE ABOUT AN ALLEY

Passageway Open for Past 40 Years is Now Fenced In

WANT IT OPENED

Council Takes Action to Abate Nuisance on Otter Street

Dispute over the closing of an alley which is said to have been open for the past 40 years was brought before borough council last night. After discussing the matter the complaint was referred to the street and highway committee in conjunction with the borough solicitor.

The alley in the rear of the properties 440, 442 and 444 Pond street has been open to travel for the past 40 years, the letter of complaint stated, but the recent purchaser of the properties located at 440 and 442 Pond street has had a fence erected and thus blocked the passage of individuals.

Many years ago the late John Koch, 444 Pond street, purchased that property and as guardian of Koch's two children the action was laid before council last night by Miss Sadie Koch.

Council also took action to compel Andrew Jackson Hibbs to abate the nuisance of draining waste water into Otter street from the property located at 549 Otter street.

The board of health informed council that several notices had been served upon Mr. Hibbs informing him that the nuisance must be abated but that thus far he had not complied with any of them.

Councilman Richard Winslow, chairman of health and sanitation committee, told council that he had talked with Mr. Hibbs, who had promised to have the work done, but thus far nothing had been started.

The matter was referred to the borough solicitor.

Superintendent of public safety paid $4 into the borough treasury as receipts from permits for Sunday ball games.

Police reported five arrests made during October. Three were discharged and two held for court. Sixty-six lodgers were sheltered and 29 incandescent lights were reported out and six are lights.

Permission to erect signs was requested for the Victor Cut Rate, the Bristol Gospel Mission and a tailor located at Lincoln avenue and Wood street. All requests were referred to street and highway committee with power to act.

Council was informed that the term of Dr. Charles S. Abbott as a member of the Board of Health would expire at the end of the year. Council voted to contact Dr. Abbott and inquire if he would continue as a member of the board.

Councilman Pfeifer reported that work had been delayed on Beaver street for a time, pending the application to LWD for the labor necessary.

Councilmen present were: Winter, Wagner, Williams, Warner, Morris, Myers, Fry, Spezzano, Winslow, Spencer, Pfeifer and Foster.

Dinner and Dance Given in Honor of Newportville XI.

NEWPORTVILLE, Nov. 13.—An invitation dinner and dance given by the champion Newportville baseball team, Saturday night, at Newportville Fire House, No. 1, was a gala occasion.

George Erny, as toastmaster, introduced each member of the team, and they, in turn, made short speeches.

The entertainment committee had selected Mrs. Eray's girls' orchestra to provide music. A girls' quartet consisting of Miss Cameron, Mrs. Richardson, Mrs. Vealring and Mrs. Shoemaker, sang war songs, in keeping with Armistice Day; and the comedy team of Erny and Kaplan was most mirth-provoking.

At the conclusion there was a grand march, led by M. Hillman and Mrs. George Erny. A large bouquet and other gifts were presented amid the applause of the crowd.

DANCING, SPECIALTIES

One hundred and eight men and women gathered at the Knights of Columbus Country Club, Eddington, last evening, to partake of an Armistice dinner, and participate in an evening of sociability in celebration of the anniversary of the signing of the Armistice. The attendants were members of Robert W. Bracken Post, 382, American Legion, and American Legion Auxiliary, and guests.

The toastmaster was post commander William Mack, and the toastmistress, Mrs. Harold H. Dettmer, president of the Auxiliary.

Commencing with the singing of "America," the chaplain, William S. Riley then asked the blessing.

Commander Mack asked for continued co-operation of the post and auxiliary. Brief remarks were also made by past commander Robert Clark, who spoke of membership, and requested that the women assist in getting the men to renew membership early. Mrs. George Croner, of Yeadon, president of the Bi-County Council of American Legion Auxiliaries (Montgomery-Bucks), congratulated the committee on the excellent dinner arrangements, and the post and auxiliary for their activities.

Woman, 92, Takes Husband Whose Age is Given at 65

BURLINGTON, N. J., Nov. 13.—All Saints Church, High street, Sunday morning was the scene of one of the most unusual weddings possibly that church will ever witness.

Mrs. Mary "Mommy" Berkhauser, 92, of East Delaware avenue, Burlington, who had outlived three other husbands was united in marriage to John Kokulski, of Camden, who himself, sports an age of 65 years. Rev. Walter Urbanik, rector of the church, officiated at the ceremony.

Following the ceremony the couple was given a noisy ovation and then a reception followed at the bride's home. The couple will reside at the bride's home this city.

Mrs. Kokulski is believed to be the oldest bride in the United States. A search through local records shows no bride even near that mark.

STOLE CLOTHES FROM CHIEF OF POLICE

"—And he stole a bundle of laundry from the front porch of the chief of police's home."

Such was the testimony offered before Justice of the Peace Neal Nolan, at Morrisville, when John Simons, Fallsington, was arraigned before him on a drunk and disorderly conduct charge.

Mrs. Margaret Johnson, sister of Chief of Police Albert Cooper, was sitting at the front window when she noticed a man come up on the front porch and take the laundry bag placed there for collection. She ran to the front porch, and met her mother, Mrs. John Cooper, who was just returning from the drug store. Mrs. Cooper started after the man, and ran after him and caught him in front of Constable Andrew R. Thompson's home on Washington Street.

In the meantime, Officer George Rose, who had noticed Mrs. Cooper running up Washington street, had started after her. He caught up with the pair, seized Simons and locked him up in the borough jail.

At the hearing, Judge Nolan fined Simons $5 and costs.

JAPAN WINS FIRST ROUND

Geneva, Switzerland, Nov. 13.—Japan today apparently had won the first round in the League of Nations Mandates Commission's deliberations over alleged fortifications of Japanese-Mandated islands in the Pacific. The draft report intended for the League Council, it was learned, is feeble in tone and does not pave the way for any real effective action by the council despite the fact that the Commission is the council's own consultative body. No steps by the council, either to wring an explanation from Japan or to deprive her of the mandates, could be taken before next Spring. Although the draft report itself is being kept secret pending final editing, it was learned Japan will once more be told to dispel all suspicion she is fortifying islets in the Ladrone group by rescinding the prohibition against foreign ships putting into these islands.

MELLON PLANS GALLERY

New York City, Nov. 13.—Andrew Mellon, often called the fourth richest man in the world, will leave his treasured collections of paintings to a gallery which he will have constructed at Washington, D. C., according to New York art dealers, who have been searching the world for great paintings for the Pittsburgh millionaire. He has had plans for such a gallery drawn up by one of New York's prominent architectural firms, but has kept them in abeyance to date. Mellon, it is said, has chosen to leave his collection to Washington rather than to his home city of Pittsburgh for two reasons. First, he would want to be remembered in Washington for his work as head of the treasury, which during the years of prosperity, led to his generally being called the "greatest secretary of the treasury since Alexander Hamilton," and second, he is of the opinion that the climate of Pittsburgh, with its heavy precipitation of soot, is injurious to paintings.

Crashes at Same Spot Where Two Men Lost Lives Several Months Ago When Car Nose-Dived Into Canal — Both Sides of Bridge Seared by Flames As Result of Today's Crash — Illuminating Gas Line Narrowly Missed.

Trapped in the cab of his truck, a man was burned to death this morning at the canal bridge on Bristol Pike at Penn Valley.

The victim: Charles Dellard, Allentown.

Dellard, employed as a driver for the Branch Storage Company, Howard and Thompson streets, Philadelphia, was enroute to New York with a load of lumber. He crashed into the left side of the iron bridge, at the same spot where several months ago two men lost their lives when their car went into the canal.

The huge machine and its contents of lumber were soon a burning mass, the flames reaching the height of a two-story building. The truck, in its impact, had barely missed striking an iron pipe over the bridge which carries illuminating gas. Had this been broken by the impact, workmen state the bridge would without doubt have become a melted mass.

OUT FOR RECORD

Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 13.—With Captain Eddie Rickenbacker at the controls, a giant Douglas monoplane took off from Washington airport at 7:58 a. m. today for Miami on a New York to Miami dawn-to-dusk round trip flight. The plane was held here for 19 minutes to permit its inspection by Eugene L. Vidal, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, in charge of aviation and some of his associates.

Bucking a 50-mile-an-hour head wind, the plane completed the run from the Newark Airport to Washington in 1 hour, 33 minutes. Favorable weather and diminishing winds were forecast from here to Miami.

Rickenbacker is accompanied by a party of 15, and is flying the same ship in which he last week established a trans-continental transport record of 12 hours, 3 minutes and 15 seconds. The plane is expected to arrive in Miami at 12:30.

MORRISVILLE POLICE MAKE EIGHT ARRESTS

Begin 'Fine War' Which Was Urged By Borough Council

OFFICERS ARE ACTIVE

MORRISVILLE, Nov. 13.—The police department, under the direction of Chief of Police Albert Cooper, began its "fine war" yesterday, and before the smoke had cleared eight arrests had been made.

This action was in response to Council's criticism of the police at their last regular meeting on Friday night, when Councilman Elwood Kohl, of the First Ward, stated that not enough fines were being turned in to the borough treasury. Kohl deplored the fact that although $1,400 had been counted upon from fines in the budget, only a much smaller amount appeared likely.

Councilman Russell Pfeiffer, of the Fourth Ward, also flayed the police for what he termed "resting."

Chief Cooper and his colleagues have been very busy during the past two days, and it appears that if the drive continues the amount of money collected from fines will even exceed the amount counted upon in the borough budget.

Charles Morgel, who lives near the scene of the crash, heard the impact, and rushed to the spot. He summoned a constable who resides nearby, and the two fire companies from Morrisville answered the alarm. It was one hour before workmen were able to extricate the charred body of Dellard. When the body was recovered it was found that one leg had been burned from the body, because of the intense flames.

The truck and its contents were completely destroyed. The truck was a twisted mass, and the lumber had been strewn about the vehicle. The ends of the bridge were greatly charred, and paint burned off of the one side.

Deputy Coroner W. Furman Young was summoned; and the body was removed to the morgue of the H. S. Rue Estate here.

When the truck crashed into the bridge the sound reverberated through the stillness of the night, and attracted those residing in the vicinity. Morrisville firemen were quick to respond to the call for aid, but due to the intense heat from the huge load of lumber the firemen were prevented from making any attempt to learn whether or not the driver was still in the cab of the vehicle. Great tongues of flames licked the lumber from end to end, and the gasoline tank of the truck exploded, adding fuel to the flames. After the mass had burned for nearly one hour, the flames at the front end of the truck had sufficiently cooled to permit firemen to enter the cab, and there the body of Dellard was found. Practically every piece of lumber on the truck, as well as the wooden body was consumed by the flames. The chassis only remained, a charred mass.

It is presumed that Dellard failed to notice the abrupt turn to the right, at the point where the bridge crosses the canal, until it was too late to stop his heavily loaded vehicle. The guard post and cables were torn out of the ground.

The spot where the crash occurred is where a number of accidents have occurred. Cars have crashed into the bridge and burned on previous occasions.

Because of the number of accidents which have occurred at this spot, it has become known as "Death Curve."

SETTLING A CONTROVERSY

It is not quite clear why any attempt should have been made to establish the claims of Thomas McKean or John Hanson to the title of first president of the United States, but the resultant discussion and research are not without value. Perusal of the documents in the case will discover why the preamble of the constitution announces that the purpose of the document is "to form a more perfect union."

The claims in behalf of McKean and Hanson are based on their having been presidents of the Continental Congress. McKean served four months before being succeeded by Hanson. Another claimant might be Samuel Huntington, of Connecticut, who was president of the Congress that was superseded by the Continental Congress.

Hoping to decide the question for all time the state department has officially held that the election of John Hanson in 1781 as "president of the United States in congress assembled" was different from the election of George Washington as "president of the United States of America."

Had it been decided that Hanson was the first president of the nation, and not merely of Congress, then it would be necessary to add seven more names to the list of those who held this high office, or all the presidents of congress until the constitution went into effect.

THE TRAIL OF JAZZ

Hardly less interesting than delving into the origin of jazz music itself, long the popular pastime of modern musicians and critics of modern music, are the efforts that have been going on for years to find where the word "jazz" came from.

Thus every student of words as well as every follower of modern music will read with interest that Professor Harold Bender, of Princeton university has succeeded, after three years of labor, in tracing the origin of the word to the west coast of Africa. It will be of interest to many that it may also be confusing to owners of the New International Dictionary which tells us the term comes from "Creole jazz, to speed up, applied to syncopated music, of Am. Negro, and, prof., African origin." This creates the impression that the word is of Creole origin, and that it is applied to the syncopated music of the American Negro probably of African origin.

Lafayette Henry traced this word to the African Gold Coast, and he died in 1904, which is 30 years ago, and F. P. Vreeland traced it to the Africans, Indians and the Spaniards for The New York Times in 1917.

If one accepts the African source as correct, it may do no harm to point out that in Arabic "jaz" is vitriol; that one who abuses or attacks is "jazbiyal" and, by extension, "jazbiyal" means "charm, grace, beauty and loveliness," also, the power of attraction.

Now, in view of the fact that the Arabs have always been known as great slave traders, is it not within the bounds of possibility that the term which is now labeled as Creole ought to be labeled Arabic?

Dumb animals are the ones that don't mix eight conflicting chemicals in their tummies.

It's got so you can hardly tell civilized people from others except by the way their feet hurt.

GIRL IN THE FAMILY

BY BEATRICE BURTON

CHAPTER XLII

Then presently everyone was gone but the family. Aunt Nell groaned with relief as she sank into her chair, kicked off her satin slippers and sent Howard upstairs for her mules. Mary untied the ribbons of her Kate Greenaway hat and tossed it on the piano, and Uncle Arthur took off his coat and collar and settled down under the lamp with the evening newspaper.

"It's wonderful to be home again," said Connie on a long contented sigh, her head against the sofa between the windows, thoroughly at ease. "Wasn't Allen nice to let us have his room while we're here?—Where did he go, by the way?"

"Back to that boarding house where he used to live," Aunt Nell's mouth was full of the hairpins that he had begun to pull from her hair. "I declare that woman must have put a hundred pins into my hair when she waved it this morning, and every one of them is sticking straight into my scalp."

I told Allen he could share Howard's room, but he wouldn't do it. . . . Well, it was a pretty wedding, wasn't it? But thank goodness it's over! I'm simply dead."

Susan began to pull off her lace mitts. "So am I," she said, "and I think I'll go right upstairs and change my things. I have to be at work tomorrow morning at half past eight."

"Susie with a job! Susie punching a time clock! It's hard to think of her as a working woman," observed Connie, "when we've always known her as a lady of leisure."

"Leisure?" repeated Susan, thinking of the pounds of silver polish and the gallons of furniture polish that she must have used in the Center Street house during her lifetime—of the hours she had followed Anna from room to room, dusting, sweeping, ironing, wiping dishes, putting blacking on the old grates.

"I wouldn't have believed the old girl had it in her," John nodded at her approvingly and affectionately. "I told Connie when I got back to Omaha last January that I'd bet she'd be married to Wallie Steffens within a month. I thought Aunt Edna and Lottie would just railroad her into it. . . . I didn't think she had the stuff in her to stand up against them."

Uncle Arthur put down his paper and cleared his throat, indicating that he was about to say something. The eyes of everyone in the room turned toward him; he very seldom had anything to say, and when he did speak, the family gave him their full attention.

"I don't know why you talk like that, John," Uncle Arthur said. "If you'd known your mother, you'd know that Susan is just like her. Janet was easy going and gentle to a certain point, but when she made up her mind to do some particular thing there was no stopping her. She could be as stubborn as a mule. My little grocery store wasn't making very much money and she told me she'd come down and find out what was the matter with it, and keep my books for me. I didn't want her to, and I did keep her out for a while but I had to give up finally. Well, sir, she came down to that store and she was the biggest sort of help to me. Went out and collected a lot of old bills and kept my books in fine order. Made me pay her a salary after a while, too. Then she saw your father and, after that, heaven and earth couldn't have kept her from marrying him—not even his family, although they did their best to. She always said she proposed to him and I'll bet a farm that she did. She always had more gumption in her little finger than all the Brodericks put together, and that's where Susan gets hers from! Yes, sir, Susie's just like Janet now that she's pulled away from her family."

"My family!" cried Susan. "Why, you're my family! I've never been anything but a Cullen. Even if you didn't know it, all of you, Aunt Edna did. She always told me so."

Dr. Lois Merkle, Sharon, was a Friday and Saturday guest of Dr. Mary Lehman, 316 Radcliffe street.

Stacy P. Cullen, Tammqua, passed the week-end with his family at 1011 Pond street.

"I'll bet she did," said Aunt Nell grimly. "I can imagine just how Susan looked around the room at all of them—her uncle and aunt, John and Connie Howard and Mary. They, and not the Brodericks, were the people to whom she was bound, the people she belonged to. She had lived with the Brodericks all her life, she had carried their name and obeyed their orders, but she had never felt herself one of them. She had been a stranger within their gates. A Cullen!"

On the wall above her uncle's chair hung a picture of her mother, a copy of the photograph that Susan had taken with her to Clay Street. She looked up at it, at the deep, serious eyes so like her own, the softly curved lips, the hair that rippled over the temples just as her own hair rippled.

All at once, as she looked at it, she knew what she was going to do. She wasn't going to sit still and wait for her life to go to pieces, as the Brodericks had sat still in their house and waited for disaster to overtake them.

She was going to do what she felt sure her mother would have done in her place. She was going to go straight to Allen Sholes and find out if he still wanted her. She was going to take things into her own hands!

The sick empty feeling that she had settled around her heart that afternoon, when she heard Aunt Nell tell Miss Carr that Allen had left the house, seemed to lift as she got up and went into the hall, where the telephone book lay on the padded window seat.

She opened it and ran through the pages until she came to the names "Jones." It seemed to her that there were hundreds of them listed, but toward the end she came to the number that Allen had given her to call the night he left the Broderick house. After the name was the address—461 North Fourth Avenue.

"Uncle Art," she called into the living room, "could Howard take me out in the car for about fifteen minutes? There's an errand that I have to do."

Her aunt came shuffling out into the hall on her tortured feet. "Where do you want to go?" she asked, just as she would have inquired into the affairs of Mary or Sara. Then, as Susan hesitated, she turned to go back into the living room. "Just don't let him drive more than twenty-five miles an hour, Susan," she said anxiously. "You keep your eye on the speedometer."

There was a sign on the Jones house in North Fourth Avenue which read: "ROOMS BY DAY, WEEK OR MEAL." Above the doorbell was a smaller sign that bore the single word, "ROOMS." In the shadows of a narrow porch, screened by ragged and sad-looking vines, three men sat talking in their shirt sleeves, their feet cocked up on the railing, their cigarette ends rose-red in the dusk.

There was no screen on the front door and Susan could look directly into the hall, which was lighted by a long coil, when she came up the steps and rang the doorbell. The men stopped talking and turned to look at her as she stood there in her beruffled blue dress and wide lace hat. After a moment an enormous woman in a burlapole apron appeared from the doorway to the right of the hall.

"Is Mr. Sholes here?" asked Susan. "And if he is could I please see him?"

"What name?" asked the woman. "Broderick," Miss Broderick.

"I'll tell him," the woman's body gave a heave under the apron as she rushed and began to climb the uncarpeted stairs to the second floor. Susan waited with a furious pounding of her heart.

Suppose Allen wouldn't listen to her? Suppose he was just as hard and unfeeling as he had been the last time he talked to her? Suppose he wouldn't make him understand that she had done her best to free herself from Wal-stand that she had done her best to free herself from Wal-the family at that time?—Well, she could only try. And if she failed she would have the cold satisfaction of knowing that she had taken her courage in her hands and tried to get him back at any rate.

There was the sound of a door opening and closing and then he came running down the stairs.

"You wanted to see me?" He peered at her questioningly through the gloom of the hallway.

"I want to talk to you, Allen."

He shook his head. "Well, I can't imagine what you want to tell me," he said. "It seems to me that you and I said just about everything there was to say to each other a long time ago." His voice was flat, indifferent.

"You may have said all you wanted to say—but I haven't," Susan said sturdily, although she felt defeated before she had really begun. "And I'm going to say what I have to say now. Allen, you don't know how much I wanted to run away with you that last night—the night that Uncle Worthy died. But I thought I couldn't. I can see now that it wouldn't have made any real difference if I had. My aunts would have had a little more work to do than they had, but that was all. Only at the time—well, I was all mixed up. I didn't know what I ought to do, and I thought you'd come back again for me."

"I told you I wouldn't, Susan."

"I know. But I thought you would. I thought you knew how much I loved you. I took it for granted that you knew it, because I was so sure of it myself. And I waited and waited for you to come back. I don't believe I ever did give you up until the last few weeks."

There was silence for a moment after that and at the back of the house they could hear a woman's voice calling out to someone named Dan that there wasn't any coffee for tomorrow's breakfast and he'd just better hustle out and buy some.

"Well, if you've given me up why are you here now?" Allen asked bluntly.

"I don't know—I think I came here with the idea of patching things up between us. I thought if you still liked me—" faltered Susan.

She stopped for a second and then went on quickly and surely. "Uncle Art was talking about my mother tonight at the house. He says she proposed to my father and married him when all the Brodericks were dead set against it. I just made up my mind to do what she did. It seems to me that everybody has to go out after what they want. Allen, I've been finding that out the last few months—and so I've come to ask you if you still want to marry me," she said. "I don't know how you feel about me, but I've got to find out—and if it's too late for me to set right all the mistakes I made five months ago, why—I'll just have to go on the rest of my life without you." A lump rose in her throat but she choked it back and went on.

"You never had any more reason to be jealous of Wallace than I had to be jealous of Mary Cullen—but I've been jealous of her almost all of the time I've known you."

"Jealous of Mary Cullen? You're crazy. I've never looked at Mary Cullen," said Allen. "What made you think I had?"

"I saw you—" Susan began to laugh unsteadily. "I saw you walking down the street together one night."

"Oh, you poor little darling!" Allen's hand touched her shoulder for just an instant as he walked past her and looked out into the street.

"Is that Howard out there in the Cullen's car?" he asked.

"Yes. He drove me over."

"Well, why don't you tell him to go back home if he wants to?—I'll take you wherever you're going, Susan."

To Mr. C. M.—If Mary is the kind of girl you say she is, there's just one answer to your question: Marry her—before some man, with a quicker eye for feminine values, takes her for his own.

Any woman can be good-looking, Mr. C. M., who knows how to handle a powder-puff and lipstick. But the woman is a find indeed, who is a good-looker—for bargains!

For you can't live on a peaches-and-cream complexion, Mr. C. M. You need more solid food for the years and years of married life.

So never smile at Mary because she happens to know the ads by heart. Thank your lucky stars that she does. You'll earn the money, Mr. C. M., but Mary will have to spend it for you. And a wife who knows her advertisements is a joy indeed. It's ten to one she'll save money and make her home a happier place to be.

EVERY SPOT ON THE RIVIERA DISTINCTIVE IN ITS CHARACTER

By Nadia De Beaud (L. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
PARIS — (INS) — Every spot on the Riviera has its own distinctive character, unlike the awful sameness of most American resort places. Whereas Nice is just a big seaport with all the advantages of life in a big town, Cannes, Juan-les-Pins and other smaller places breathe more of the resort. Of these Cannes stands for elegance and society, whereas Juan-les-Pins appeal to those who seek crowds and eccentricity.

Cannes has its promenade along the sea, the Croisette, bordered by palatial hotels, each of which has a beach in front, where people can lie around under umbrellas, taking occasional

MOST NECKLINES ARE HIGH AND ALSO VERY CLOSE TO THROAT

By Rhandena A. Armstrong
(Home Economics Representative)

Most necklines are high and close to the throat, featuring some unusual draping or cut of the dress material, according to Miss Armstrong, home economics extension representative.

Although white collars are less numerous, they make up in size, however, what they lack in numbers. Crepe, grograin ribbons, and satin are used for large collars, ruffled jabots, and bulky bows. Soft matelasse crepe and silk woven with metal threads are used for the draped scarf collars.

More practical than white, and high in fashion favor, are brightly printed or plain silk scarfs, tucked in the necklines of the dark dresses. A red velvet collar on a black wool dress, or bright blue on gray are other good suggestions.

There are many narrow tailored belts of dress material, sometimes trimmed with rows of stitching. Sashes are new. These show a contrast in color or surface finish; heavy cords are used also. Leather belts are attractive on knitted or tweed dresses.

Buttons are large and important, often making the only trimming of the dress. Most of them are of gold or silver.

ver or wood and although they are decorative, they also must have a real purpose. This means well-made and attractively bound button-holes or loops of self material. Clips often worn in pairs are great favorites. These, too, vary in materials from wood to rhinestone.

Purses and gloves often match. And by the way, patterns may now be purchased for both these accessories to be made at home.

Look up pieces of fur or worn fur garments stored in the attic, and make for yourself a fur kerchief scarf, a long, narrow stole, scarf or a little cape. Perhaps you would prefer a little hat and a muff. Scarfs are more popular than ever; ascots, bright silk or knitted kerchiefs, and the familiar long, narrow ones.

TROJANS WIN FROM BRIDESBURG, 33 TO 0

EDDINGTON, Nov. 13.—On their home field, the Eddington Trojans ran roughshod over the Bridesburg Ironbacks to the tune of 33-0, Sunday. Scoring in every period, the Trojans' offense worked to perfection to check up their unbeaten record of seven straight wins.

Twenty-three fully uniformed men, working as a unit, marched up and down the field almost at will. Although several individuals were outstanding, the success of the game was teamwork. Every man was doing his job and the plays had to work.

Starting the game the Trojans received and Hokey Leighton made a nice run back. With the ball on the thirty yard line, a march of seventy yards started which was completed when Harry Mellor, stalwart fullback, plunged over for the first six-pointer. The extra point was garnered when Collins drove through center, making the score, at this point, 7-0.

Kicking off to the visitors, the Trojan line was too strong and soon they were on their way for another touchdown. Getting to the ten yard line, the visitors' defense tightened and held for three downs. Here Leighton elected to take to the ozone, throwing a beautiful flank pass into the hands of Jimmy Lake on the three yard line. It was only a matter of stepping over the line but in some mysterious manner the ball fell from Lake's hands just as he crossed the line. The officials ruled the pass fumbled and recovered by the Bridesburg club on the two yard line. Shortly after the quarter ended with the score 7-0.

With the start of the second quarter, a complete new Trojan team was sent on the field. Not to be outdone, Team B went to work right away and soon Darkhorse Johnson raced across the goal line for the second six-pointer. Stet Crossley's line buck was stopped short and the score stood 13-0. Throughout the remainder of the half, the two teams played equally and neither were able to score.

Team A was sent in to start the second half. After four or five minutes on the defense, the Trojans again started their march up their field. Several nice runs by Stet Crossley and Harry Mellor soon brought the ball inside the twenty. Taking the ball around end behind perfect interference, Joe Dibbs scored standing up. Again the extra point was garnered by Collins, making the score 20-0.

Once more the Trojans succeeded in scoring during the third period when Harry Mellor drove over, making it 26-0. The placement kick by Collins was wide.

Starting the last quarter with Team B, the score was raised to 33-0. Several nice runs by Johnson, Lefty Crossley, with Norm Hughes hitting the line, featured Joe Dibbs crossed for the fifth touchdown and Johnson passed to Myers for the point.

This ended the scoring for the day, but the end of the game found the ball on the opponents' goal line with the Trojans in possession. This game definitely proved that the Trojans have arrived. In extending their winning streak to seven straight they conclusively showed that all their potential ability has developed.

This week found the Trojans again on the pile-driving fullback, Stet Crossley, back in action giving, along with Harry Mellor, two hard-driving backs. The line as usual played its superb game and can be compared with any in Bucks County. The following is the line-up:

JAYVEES WIN OVER JENKINTOWN, 12 TO 7

The battle of the air forces! This was a suitable sobriquet for the Bristol Jay Vees' 12-7 triumph over the Jenkintown Reserves, yesterday, on the latter's gridiron.

Constant fumbles on the part of both team's backfields seemed to halt all progress within the thirty-yard marker.

Showing a great fighting spirit the Cardinal and Gray lads overcame a seven-point lead garnered by the Red and Black in the first period.

Starting a march on the Bristol 40, as result of a costly fumble by a visiting back, the Jenkintown eleven completed a trio of passes and scored. The final toss was snatched by "Walt" Fox, Jenkintown back, and crossed the goal.

On the extra point try, "Joe" Fitzgerald, the bullet passer of the Red and Black, tossed a pass to "Jack" Hoffman, who made a spectacular grab for the conversion.

Bristol's initial touchdown came as the result of a perfectly executed pass. "Punk" Zefferi faded back and threw a pass to "Paul" Niccol for 40 yards and a touchdown. The "Bunnies" missed the extra point.

Jenkintown, 7; Bristol, 6.
After five minutes of play in the second half the Cardinal and Gray scored the winning tally. On a perfectly executed reverse, Bauroth to Zefferi, the Cardinal and Gray quarterback scampered 40 yards for the count. The extra point again failed.

Captain "Tom" Profy, brilliant line-man, working like a trojan on both offense and defense, starred for the visitors. Time and again "Prof" broke through to rush or tackle the passer.

"Tony" Orazi, blocking halfback, shone in his blocking and tackling; as well as "Nels" Campbell, young rising guard who tackled quite well.

The "Bunnies" made five first downs to the Red and Black clad warriors' four.
